MAYBE IT'S JUST ME

BY TOPHER PAYNE

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING

I was wondering if we would make it through the noise

I'M LYING IN BED WITH MY BOYFRIEND PREPPY, enjoying that fuzzy place just before I fall asleep. There's freshly laundered sheets that smell like gardenias, and I'm curled up with a man I adore.

I am officially content.

Then, just as I'm drifting off, a deafening noise pierces the silence, akin to someone starting a chainsaw next to my head. I bolt upright and look over, already knowing the source: Preppy is snoring.

Careful not to disturb his slumber, I roll him over on his side, which stops the chainsaw, replacing it with what I've come to call "The Death Rattle." Sometimes the Rattle only lasts a few minutes and subsides.

No such luck tonight.

I tilt his head forward. I stare at him and silently demand he stop this racket right now. The Rattle continues, supplemented by the sound the spit-sucker makes when you go to the dentist.

I rub his back and say, "Shhhh," very gently. Then I say "Shhh," a little less gently. And I shove him a little.

"Wha, huh?" Preppy says.

"You were snoring, baby."

"Were you shushing me?"

"I was out of ideas. I thought it might make you stop."

"How? I'm not doing it on purpose!"

"I know, I know," I say. "Go back to sleep. Sorry."

HE FLOATS BACK TO HIS DREAMS. THE RATTLE returns, defiantly, with renewed vigor. I put a pillow over my head and pray for sleep.

On the phone the next day, my sister Shannon tells me to try lightly pinching his nostrils. It worked on her husband.

So that night, when the chainsaw massacre begins anew, I reach over and very carefully pinch his nose. It works! He instantly stops snoring. I want to dance a little jig, so great is my joy — until I realize Shannon's trick didn't simply make Preppy stop snoring. He's also not breathing.

SWEET JESUS. I THINK I KILLED MY BOYFRIEND.

I shake him, which gives him a good jump start, his mouth falls slack, and a new instrument is added to the bedtime symphony: sort of a mournful, moose-like sound. I decide this is my karmic punishment for trying to murder him in his sleep. I put the pillow back on my head and fail to sleep much.

The next morning, my roommate George notes that I'm unusually grumpy.

"Your reaction to this snoring business is beginning to concern me," George says.

"Have you ever slept with a man that snores?" I ask.

"Darling, I've encountered every deficiency known to mankind. There were a few that snored. I thought it was kinda cute."

"No, George. Golden retriever puppies with giant paws are cute. Sleep apnea is just frustrating. Plus, it's not good for him. I'm thinking of his welfare."

"Bullshit, you're thinking of your beauty rest. Personally, I think you just need to learn to sleep through it and accept that there are some things you can't control."

I'M REALLY TRYING TO DO THAT, I SWEAR. A few days before, I ran across one of Preppy's T-shirts in my bedroom.

It was a Larry the Cable Guy shirt that said "Git Ur Done." My first instinct upon finding it was, of course, to set it on fire and play dumb later.

My instinct is to make anything I don't like go away immediately, but I don't want to repeat mistakes with my Ex. I folded the shirt and put it away.

Now, faced with the snoring quandary, I'm once again battling whether to try and fix something, or accept it. I really wish there was a reference guide for these scenarios.

But, left to my own devices, I decide that I'm probably just adjusting to someone sleeping in my bed on a regular basis. With time I'll get used to my bellowing boyfriend. I don't need to force this issue.

But there's no harm in picking up some Breathe-Right strips and casually leaving them next to the bed, just in case he'd like to try them.

indie queers descend on atlanta

WOWING CROWDS FROM THE UNITED Kingdom to South Korea to Tunisia, Akil Wingate can't wait to perform in Atlanta as part of MondoHomo Dirty South — a five-day queer indie music, arts and cultural fest taking place June 27 to July 1.

"It's good to do something for a domestic audience," says Akil, a dance music vocalist and composer who splits his time between Europe and California.

"And with Atlanta being sort of a haven for music — particularly for R&B — I'm just looking forward to performing in that sort of market."

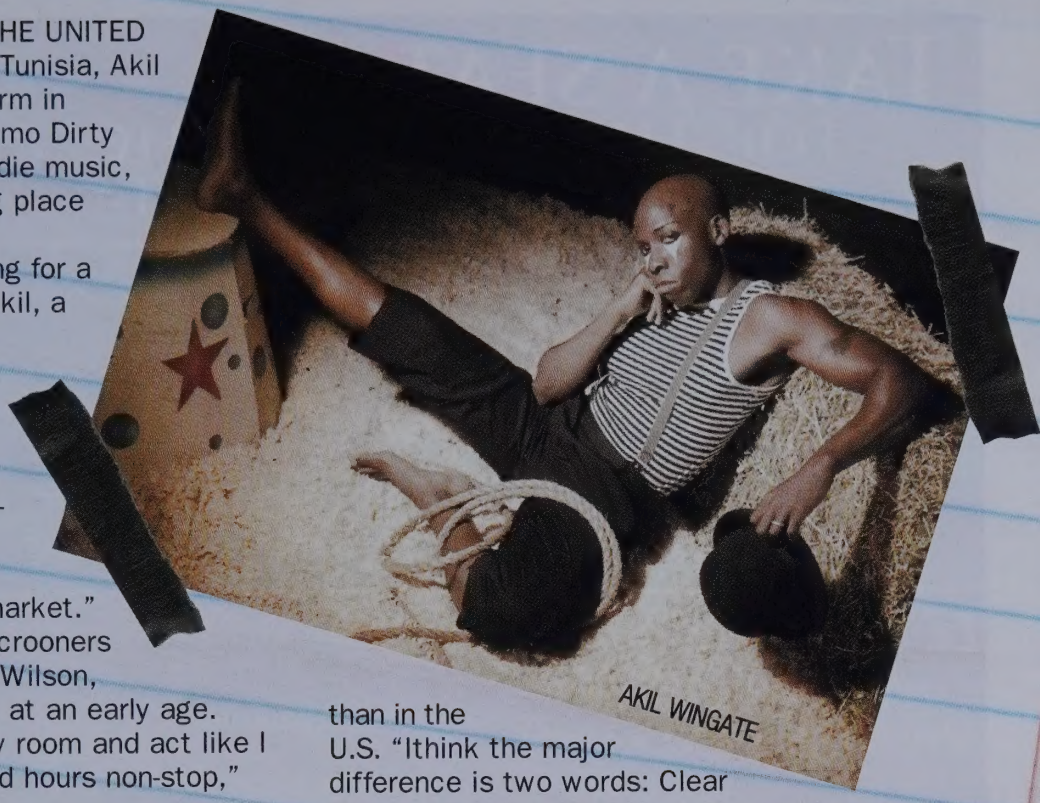
Influenced by old school crooners like Sam Cooke and Jackie Wilson, Akil found comfort in music at an early age.

"I would literally go in my room and act like I was in concert for hours and hours non-stop," he remembers with a laugh.

His first professional break came when he was 16 and lied about his age to join a 16-piece band in the spirit of the Brand New Heavies or Earth Wind & Fire.

"Some of the members were in their 40s and 50s, and here I was, 16 years old pretending to be 25," says Akil, who was living in Washington D.C. at the time.

The group took Akil to England, where he was exposed to dance music and rock, and able to work alongside and cull tips from music greats like Peter Gabriel. He was also able to generate grassroots buzz and launch an independent music career, something he says is easier to do overseas than in the U.S. "Ithink the major difference is two words: Clear Channel," Akil says. "Clear Channel is like the gatekeeper [of what becomes popular music in the U.S.], and over there it's not."



AKIL WINGATE

Akil believes global musicians and consumers seem to be more aware and wary of the corporatization of music than their U.S. counterparts, and how mundane business stories like Rupert Murdoch attempting to acquire Dow Jones & The Wall Street Journal might influence what music gets distributed.

AKIL'S ANTI-ESTABLISHMENT TENDENCIES make him a perfect fit for MondoHomo, which is intended to celebrate independence and radicalism from progressive queers that might not fall in the "mainstream" of other gay life. He's set to play at two events on MondoHomo's opening night June 27, one at the Earl, both in East Atlanta.

"I think it's going to be very empowering, and I definitely think it's going to be something Atlanta hasn't seen before," says MondoHomo co-organizer Kiki Carr. "It will pull together a community of people who are interested in doing things in the politically radical, or independent, or artistic sort of way."

MondoHomo stretches across three intown neighborhoods, with more than five-dozen musical acts at venues in Little Five Points, Poncey-Highland and East Atlanta Village. The music portion features performers from all genres, and across gender and racial lines — from local spoken-word acts like trans boi Katz of Athens Boy's Choir, to a huge touring collection of gay rappers known as the HomoRevolution Tour, to punk rock transsexual Jayne County who participated in the Stonewall Riots in '69, and many many more.

BIGG NUGG

"We've paid a lot of attention and tried to make this as diverse a festival as possible," Carr says. "It's obvious that Atlanta and the Southeast is very hungry for this."

In addition to the music, MondoHomo features several offbeat options such as an interactive Jell-O trampoline installed inside Lenny's Bar & Grill, and a skateboarding how-to session with the group Skate Like a Girl.

TIMED TO COINCIDE WITH THE U.S. Social Forum — a massive gathering of progressive activists taking place in Atlanta June 27-July 1 — MondoHomo also hopes to inspire queers to infuse some politics into their partying, and vice versa.

"We seek to expand the boundaries of queer identity and indie culture, and to forge broad alliances among queers, indie artists and activists," reads the "MondoHomo Manifesto." "We seek to make political change through art and music, and to make art and music that is fundamentally political."

The co-mingling of consciousness and art is another exciting draw for Akil, who says he gets tired of going to music or gay festivals and seeing nothing but alcohol vendors and corporate sponsors.

Attending a massive gay festival recently, Akil was disturbed when he saw that all of the booths for gay organizations and HIV education were relegated to a desolate corner of the venue — segregated from mainstream vendors.

"To me, that kind of situation — as a black man as well as as a gay black man — is sort of a slap in the face," says Akil, who is also a spokesmodel for the "HIV Stops With Me" campaign.

"If only we could use these venues and these types of events to reach out to more people, and to get people forward-thinking, maybe we can take some steps forward," Akil says.

COOKIN' UP A STORM

A CHAT WITH DALE LEVITSKI OF 'TOP CHEF MIAMI'

FOR IT'S THIRD SEASON, BRAVO'S "TOP CHEF" moves to the gay friendly area of South Beach, and David took some time to speak with one gay contestant, chef Dale Levinski.

We learned all about his entrepreneurial spirit, the arithmetic of spices, and got a few tips for the upcoming Fourth of July barbecues.

David: Why did you begin cooking?

Dale Levinski: I always enjoyed cooking. My grandmother was a fantastic cook on my mom's side. On my dad's side, the same thing. I had a lot of home cooking as I grew up, so it was just a big part of my life. In college, I was flipping burgers and I just loved the rush of being on the line. So, I decided to go that route

How did you get involved with 'Top Chef?'

Just kind of on a last minute whim, I was watching a "Top Chef" marathon and there was a little casting blurb, so I downloaded the application and talked about it with my boyfriend at the time.

A lot of my friends were just like, "Go for it! Go for it!" Well, a couple weeks later, he dumped me. I flew out to L.A. on an open call, and I was hell bent on landing the show.

Let's say you're having a date over for dinner. What do you need to keep in mind?

Don't cook for him at home. (Laughs) Being a chef, there's this kind of expectation of throwing the fantastic dinner party. But if anything, just keep it super simple.

Don't try to impress too hard or try too hard. Don't try and like, you know, be egotistical and go overboard with something that's going to be intimidating.

Your online bio says something about flavor math? What's up with that?

It's a phrase I use. There are so many different components to a dish. You have to balance your seasoning with salt and sugar — your acids and different textures.

Balancing out all of the different flavors, you literally add them all up in your head, and it becomes this very well rounded little bubble of what's going to make a dish absolutely balanced and work.

If a dish falls flat, it's likely missing one of the prime components of what's going to accentuate the flavor.

Has being gay has impacted your career and the way you get around the kitchen?

I think being gay in the kitchen has actually made me a better chef. My own insecurity would be to be concerned about what other people are going to think about me since the kitchen is a physical, "masculine" environment.

You're working long hours and you're sweaty and bumping into one another. There's definitely a step in proving yourself, that you are good, that you aren't just a stereotype, and proving to them that you are one of them at the same time. ... But if you can cook, you can cook.

You and Sandee both have Mohawks. Did that cause any stirs... or hair product sharing?

It was kind of funny... When Sandee and I met, I was just like, "Oh, Jesus, the two gay people with Mohawks..."

The Mohawks have gotten a lot of attention. I shaved it in right before the show. I didn't intend for that. It was just as new for me.

What recommendations do you have for the perfect Fourth of July barbecue?

The most important thing to do is to keep it as simple as possible. Get good quality meat and season it correctly with a good salt, pepper, some oil. Don't try and over do it.

Make sure your meat and your vegetables are grilled perfectly. That's all you need. A good barbecue is about good beer, good hooch and good meat!

'Top Chef Miami' airs on Wednesdays at 10 p.m. on Bravo

HERE WE GO, WEHO!

A VISIT TO L.A.'S GAYEST DISTRICT

THEY SAY YOU CAN'T GO HOME AGAIN. Well, they're wrong!

My boyfriend and I did over Memorial Day weekend, returning to my old stomping grounds in West Hollywood, to give the place a look from a visitor's perspective.

Despite my familiarity with the 1.9 square miles of local life, I decided to consult the West Hollywood Convention & Visitors Bureau for advice. The staff is bubbly and friendly and knows everything there is to know about visiting the 90069.

Immediately upon arriving, we went to Chi Chi LaRue's club "Dirty Deeds" at Fubar. It's very popular on Thursday nights for Mario Diaz's "Big Fat Dick" party and the new home of Friday night's "Drunk and Horny."

After a couple of drinks and a few laughs, we walked a few blocks west to Bar Lubitsch. It was a gay bar back in the day that I remember fondly. Now it's a hipster bar welcoming a mixed, but predominately straight crowd. It's fun and fancy, plus they play good music and have tasty signature drinks.

THE NEXT DAY, WE SLEPT IN LATE, AND really only woke up in time for a quick bite out the door and a walk around the city. When it came time for dinner, we tried the Caribbean flair of Cha Cha Cha.

The restaurant has a really great tapas menu and fantastic sangria. It is family-owned and operated, which is apparent from the friendly service. Plus it's not a far walk from the bars.

Afterwards, we checked out a little east side nightlife action beyond the borders of West Hollywood. We hit up the Eagle in Silverlake for a few beers with "Freebird" before contrasting our night with "Tigerheat" (a.k.a. "The Heat") and the Lounge with "Since U Been Gone."

Friday was a blur of trees and rivers as we set out to find ourselves in nature on a hike to the "Bridge to Nowhere" in the San Gabriel Mountains. West Hollywood is close to all kinds of natural escapes just a skip away on the freeway.

After hiking, we returned to civilization, hobbling on sore feet, to indulge at a new West Hollywood restaurant, Hadaka Sushi. It opened recently as a redesigned sleek and sexy restaurant, with joke menus that are distributed as either "naughty" or "nice."

The sushi was superb. The entrees were delectable. The service was impeccable. And be sure to check out their varying menu of cold sakes.

After dinner, we ventured out to check out the monthly night Club 82 at the Avalon in Hollywood (beyond the WeHo border), where some funky electro played.

AFTER A MUCH-NEEDED REST, WE DECIDED TO check out Taste on Melrose for brunch. And we are so glad we did!

Everyone enjoyed their inventive brunch options, then we went to check out some galleries and also the hit show "WACK!" at the Geffen Contemporary at MOCA. Then we battled L.A. traffic to make it to Hollywood to pamper a friend at Pampered Hands and Feet, a fantastic and reasonable mani-pedi spa on Melrose. My favorite part: at the end, your feet or hands are mummified in hot towels — so fun and relaxing!

That evening, we checked out what my friends refer to as "gay town hall," the Abbey, for dinner.

It was pretty good, though a bit crowded. Afterwards, we hit up nightspots Fiesta Cantina (known for their 2-for-1 specials, great margaritas and rooftop lounge) and the weekly Saturday dance club "Hotdog," an electroclash thanks to promoter Mario Diaz. It's raunchy and fun with its trucker-themed go-go scenery.

It recently moved to a new location (it was the last night at the old location when we were there) at Dragonfly. As a final chapter to our evening, we sent the birthday boy home to rest and checked out a late night warehouse afterhours downtown presented by HAWT Music. What a day!

ON OUR LAST DAY, WE HAD only enough time for a quick drive out to see the Pacific Ocean. Dinner that night was at the historic and fantastic Palm Restaurant. Full of history and amazing steak (actually the inventor of the term "surf and turf"), the Palm is perfect for recharging.

The service and food were absolutely impeccable. Simply amazing.

Monday was Memorial Day, and we had breakfast at The Restaurant at The Standard. Afterwards, we met a friend at a barbecue and headed out of town, back to the Dirty South.

When we arrived home, as the woman said, "On behalf of our Los Angeles based flight crew, I'd like to welcome you all to Atlanta," I cried a little. West Hollywood is such a friendly and fantastic place to be.

Learn to Chill

Take a Break from the Summer Sizzle

IT'S SUMMERTIME, AND FOR MOST OF US that means slowing down and taking a little time for much needed rest and relaxation. Sounds like a good idea, but for many guys it's problematic.

Between the job, working out and a hectic social calendar, life stays busy 24/7 all year long.

But if you want to remain productive at work, keep kicking butt in the gym and hang on to all those friends, there's no other choice: you have to make time to unwind.

In order to relax, give yourself permission first. Cut yourself some slack. Here are a few easy tips to help you to take a break from the summer sizzle and teach you how to chill out.

TRAIN YOURSELF TO CARRY A NOTEBOOK WITH you — to work, to the gym, to Blake's, etc.

Jot down anything that occurs to you that needs to be done. Go through the list now and then. Cross off stuff you do, and more importantly, what you really don't need to do. You'll feel lighter, more accomplished, and more in control of your life.

Learn the value of sleep. Rest is essential to revive tired muscles, a tired brain and a tired tongue. Experts tell us that 8-10 hours of sound shuteye a night are essential to good physical and mental health.

If you have trouble sleeping, try changing things up a bit. Avoid timing your workouts before bedtime, as you may feel revved up when you should be on your way to the dreamscape.

Second, keep your work area separate from your sleeping quarters. Keep your bed and nightstand clear of papers and clutter that will remind you of work and deadlines.

Third, keep the temperature cool and shut out all needless light. And you're not too butch to try a soft mask or eye pillow to block out light and visual distractions.

WHEN YOU GET HOME FROM WORK, TRY A little stretching. Chances are you have been sitting most of the day, and your lower back is killing you.

Take a few minutes to lie flat on your back on the floor. First, bring you knees up so that your lower back touches the floor. Lower your legs straight out and your back will be in a good position for relaxing. Let your feet flop outwards, have your arms a little out from your sides with palms facing upward.

Tilt your head forward a little so that your neck is in a relaxed position. Now, go through your whole body mentally focusing your attention on one area at a time. Start with the soles of your feet and work your way up to your temples and forehead.

Think "relax" as you breathe in and out deeply and slowly at each area.

Visit a Spa. I know, I know. You're "real men don't get mani-pedis and facials." But have you checked out those blackheads or glanced down at those crusty toenails lately?

Why not pamper yourself with a body scrub, facial or citrus and aromatherapy massage? Life is too short to deny yourself these delicious indulgences.

And finally, make time for your friends this summer. Too often we let work, obligations and other nuisances come before those we love. Consider the bigger picture to see where your deepest satisfaction lies, then try to live life to the fullest.

You are worth the effort and deserve it!

ON HER OWN TERMS

Kelly Clarkson's emotional new album proves Clive Davis wrong

THREE YEARS AFTER "BREAKAWAY" MADE her an even bigger name than her "American Idol" victory, Kelly Clarkson is finally allowed to share her third album, "My December," with the world. According to reports, BMG Label Group's CEO, Clive Davis, held up the album for months due to concerns over the material.

Admittedly, Davis has discovered and signed some of the biggest names in music (Whitney Houston, Billy Joel, Bruce Springsteen, Sarah McLachlan), and everyone has bad days at the office.

But holding up the new Clarkson album? What was he thinking?

"My December" is Clarkson's most personal, intense and emotional release to date. She wrote or co-wrote every track, and fought to make sure the material saw the light of day. Thank goodness Clarkson got her way.

Yes, "My December" is raw and much darker than its predecessors, but Clarkson sounds amazing on every song. The album may not churn out hit after hit ("Breakaway" saw the successful release of the title track, "Since U Been Gone," "Behind These Hazel Eyes," "Because of You," and "Walk Away"), but Clarkson is at the top of her game, and on her own terms.

The hit debut single, "Never Again," is along the same lines of Alanis Morissette's "Jagged Little Pill," but with a softer edge.

"I hope the ring you gave to her turns her finger green/ I hope when you're in bed with her, you think of me/ I would never wish bad things, but I don't wish you well," Ms. Clarkson lovingly sings.

"One Minute" is a song made for summer if ever there were one. The guitars are cranked up, the beat is driving, and the lyrics deal playfully with uncertainty in relationships. This song has "hit" written all over it.

THE DARKNESS ROLLS ON, BUT DAMN, IT makes for good music.

One of the album's standout tracks is the upbeat and rocking "Hole," but there is some profound sadness at the core of the music.

"I'm so far from where I need to be/ I've given up on faith, on everything," and "There's a hole/ Inside of me/ It's so cold/ Slowly killing me" are not usually the lyrics of a instant pop hit, but "Hole" may prove to be the exception.

"Don't Waste Your Time" is a plucky talk-to-the-hand tune made for radio. In this track, Clarkson tells her ex that she does not even want him as a friend (as if he even knows what that means) because he pulls her down.

Also in the uptempo "my man did me wrong" vibe, "Judas" deals with (Wait for it ... wait for it ...) betrayal and hurt and "Haunted" chronicles the longing for the closeness of a relationship.

Clarkson slows things down on "Sober," a beautiful, powerful track packed with emotion about getting over a breakup. When Clarkson talked in the press about a bad relationship coloring the material on "My December," she certainly wasn't kidding.

THE ALBUM IS NOT ALL gloom and doom. "Be Still" is a tender song about taking time to find the romance, of two lovers meeting in the middle to make it work. Similarly, "Maybe" is about the hope that two former lovers might meet in the future and mend their relationship after time apart.

Clarkson unleashes her inner Pussycat Doll on "Yeah" and introduces us to sexpot Kelly, a side of her we have not seen before. The horns and the "You Can Leave Your Hat On" vibe make this an excellent track nestled toward the end of the album.

The final labeled track on the album (of course there is a hidden track), "Irvine," is hauntingly beautiful. Clarkson's songwriting is on point and her vocals ethereal and almost unreal.

Clarkson says "Irvine" was written about the depression she felt after a show in that city on her last tour. The track is a prayer, asking if God can feel her pain all the way from heaven.

If "Irvine" (and the rest of "My December," for that matter) is the type of music we can continue to look forward to from Clarkson, then Davis can hem and haw all he wants. The girl has real talent, so shut up and get out of the way.

Even though it puts money in Davis' pockets, go out and buy two copies — just to prove him wrong.

'My December' is available on RCA Records. www.kellyclarkson.com. You know Brushstrokes and Outwrite are all over it, so ask next time you visit.
